The Department of Philosophy and Classics Proudly Presents a Brackenridge Distinguished Visiting Lecture:

Alcibiades, Psychopathy, and Our Ancient Ambivalence toward the Psychopathic Leader

Friday, March 4th
3:00 PM
MB 0.104

This talk explores the extent to which the fifth-century BCE Athenian statesman Alcibiades exhibits traits that resemble contemporary constructs of psychopathy. Such an approach allows us to explore the extent to which psychopathy (and psychopathic leadership) is a cross-cultural phenomenon as well as why such personality types seem to be over-represented in leadership populations.

Dr. Norman Sandridge,
Howard University